Need Extra Clerks?

Postoffice inspectors are at work in this district examining into the needs of the various postoffices in regard to extra clerks when the parcels post law goes into effect January 1. It is expected that in those cities where the post is to be established, extra mail clerks will be needed to handle the business which will arise from the transportation of farm and city products to the city and vice versa. The rural carriers who have been carrying mail on horseback and on motorcycles will probably have to use teams, wagons and automobiles when the new business is thoroughly developed. The business of the inspectors is to get a line on the amount of business done at the different offices and formulate some kind of an idea as to the extent of the additional service which will be required.

Gets Fine Apples

Col. C. C. Bell, of Booneville, one of the scientific apple-raisers in Missouri, has finished packing and shipping his apples from Rochepot, where his orchards are located. His Cooper county orchard which is sprayed and pruned, scientifically, produced perfect fruit. He shipped one carload of apples that were polished and wrapped with all the care used in the highest developed western fruit valleys. It costs $300 to get the fruit in the car but he expects the shipment to pay out in the New York market and if he finds he is right, he will do more of this next year. Mr. Bell believes in raising stock and apples or anything else in just as fine quality as possible.
